College of Educational Studies – Chapman University	Orange	Faculty	Full-time

General Information

Chapman University seeks applications for an Assistant / Associate / Full Professor of Teacher Education for the Graduate Teacher Education Program in the College of Educational Studies, beginning August 2016.

Chapman University, located in the heart of Orange County, California, offers select pre-professional and graduate programs as well as traditional undergraduate programs in the arts and sciences. Ranked in the top tier of Western universities, and recently identified as the #1 ranked “Up-and-Coming” school in the Western region by U.S. News and World Report, Chapman has gained national recognition with its commitment to excellence through research and ground-breaking teaching. The College of Educational Studies offers Master of Arts degrees which include credentials in multiple subject, single subject, and special education. Information about the College of Educational Studies is available at <http://www.chapman.edu/ces>.

The Donna Ford Attallah Educator Development Academy (EDA) houses both undergraduate and graduate programs in teacher education. At the graduate level, our credential-embedded Master of Arts programs prepare K-12 teachers to work with children of varied cultural backgrounds. The graduate credential programs recognize the need to develop teachers who can apply research-based approaches to teaching while maintaining the social consciousness to address inequities in current educational structures. The undergraduate Integrated Educational Studies Program seeks to prepare professionals who are forward-thinking and envision the world of education in new and dynamic ways. We are committed to providing Chapman University students with a dynamic and intellectually challenging liberal arts-based education that promotes critical thinking.

Qualifications

Required qualifications:

- Earned doctorate in Education or related field.
- Evidence of effective teaching at the graduate level.
- Demonstrated record or promise of sustainable and significant research and scholarship.
